

"To achieve One World Government it is necessary to remove from the minds of men their individualism, their loyalty to family traditions and national identification."

It's All About Children and One Child

Merry Christmas—it's going to be Jesus' birthday soon and it's going to be a joyful time for many youngsters who are busy creating memories for parents, grandparents and themselves.

There is no more important item in the family linkage than traditions. From mom's special turkey dressing to how your parents decorated your tree; when they put it up and when they took it down—all are links to our childhood and important family memories.

Many of our readers, who may be on the high end of middle age, are now orphans. Regrets seem to grow with age as we think about those we miss and those we didn't spend enough time with when we were younger. Most may have been the product of a family that did not use hugs and the word love. As a result we may have been inclined to overcompensate for this disparity and overly hugged and said the word love to much.

In modern society, Hollywood has passed along the idea that love is temporary; they mistake it for lust perhaps.

The baby-boomer parents had wanted to be friends with their children; not parents. Even the book "Tough Love" was needed to be written to provide guidance to people who really didn't know how to be an effective bad guy when they needed to be.

The want to be better, softer, and more understanding parents, led to a society of young adults that are disconnected from what is supposed to be more important to them than themselves. The saddest strategy was to cling to children, making them weak and irresponsible adults.

Don't read into this commentary, there are many good young adults out there that are serving in the military, medical fields and other highly committed jobs. There is even a significant level of volunteerism and charity, but that seems to be in the Bible Belt more so than on the consumer coasts.

Many of our liberal friends have strong beliefs in the spirit of the forest, eating meat is an atrocity and UFOs. They believe they are the only ones capable of saving the planet and human race.

On the other side of the coin, the conservatives out there believe only God Himself can now save the world and save us from the demise of the human race as a result of modern liberalism.

The liberals feel they know best on how things in society should function and that all people, other than themselves, need to be guided, protected and provided for by the government.

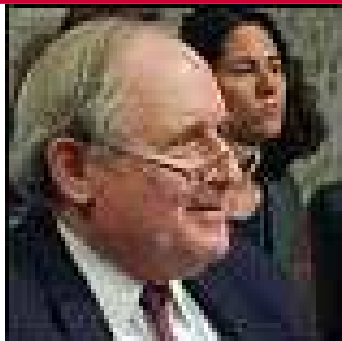

In contrast, conservatives think a person and family has an innate responsibility to take care of themselves, except in cases that require our attention because of someone's lot in life; they think it is best for charities to manage the purse to ensure the poor are fed and clothed. They like to ensure those with disabilities are provided for so they can live a life as full as possible.

During this Christmas season, keep the children in mind and more importantly, keep the one child in mind that generated the season filled with meaningful love, forgiveness, family and friends. Please remember The Marine Corps League, Salvation Army and St. Vincent DePaul.

Are You Stupid? Dem' Dems Think So!

Reid, Pelosi, Boxer, Kennedy, Kerry and all the other liberals out there keep running their mouths and making judgments they aren't capable of making. Why? Because they're idiots. Do they discuss pulling the police out of the ghetto because the crime rate is just too high or from the high-cost, little results UN? No. And they're still idiots.

We here at the Yooper Scooper are quite sick of hearing the DC morons calling for President Bush to provide them with an exit strategy. The rest of America heard the exit strategy time and time again, so why haven't the Democrats heard it? Because, they're idiots. Since Vietnam, the liberals have been warned not to provide aid and comfort to the enemy, but they still do by rallying others to protest the war. Why? Because they are now a collective group of idiots.

Hillary Clinton is now mainstreaming as much as she can by supporting the war to help her win the independent vote in '08. She is an idiot and those who would fall for that and vote for her in '08 are complete idiots.

What Would Archie Think? By Carole "CJ" Williams

Ever heard of "Emily's List"? Me either, until recently. Emily isn't a real person and the list has nothing to do with groceries or "honey-do's". Instead, Emily's List is a powerful and controversial feminist money machine focused on empowering women to get into the Democratic Party ring and fight like a man...or better yet, beat out the best man for the job.

The Emily's aren't too fussy about whom they support, but whichever bimbo it might be, all they need do is adhere to Democratic party lines once elected. Vote pro-life and they're aborted, though with a lot less gore and heartbreak than a partial birth abortion.

Emily's List is marching into Michigan now to throw early financial support behind failed Canadian born actress/eco-fem, Governor Granolaholm and anti-gunslinger/anti-NRA, Debbie Stabenow. But then, Jen and Deb have been party loyalists, right down to championing UN-sustainable development in our state, which, by the way, is synonymous with Agenda 21 and all it's many chapters dictating how America and our state should run its business... including one on empowering women to "be all they can be", even if that means attaching strings to lithe limbs like an empty headed puppet and dancing to tunes played by Detroit Demon-crat Party boss, Ed McNamara.

Among other notables of questionable quality, Emily's List has supported such barracudas as: Bitchy Barbara Boxer, Feral Diane Feinstein, Wisconsin's Eco-Babe Tammy Baldwin, Carolyn Cheeks Kilpatrick (proud momma of Detroit's corrupt mayor who threw Jennie the black vote for favors earned), and, yes, Her Highness Hilary Clinton, Queen Mother of Hypocrites and devoted wife of philandering Willie.

Man, Archie Bunker would have a ball with this! ~Cj

Johanns Announces Funds for Conservation Programs

Michigan Ag News Headlines

Michigan Ag Connection - 12/02/2005

Agriculture Secretary Mike Johanns announced the release of nearly $2.7 billion in fiscal year 2006 for voluntary conservation programs on working lands. And according to the USDA, Michigan will receive over $49.8 million dollars as part of the allocation.

"Conservation on private lands is an important priority for USDA. We are fulfilling that commitment by responding to the needs of agricultural producers to provide more certainty and predictability in their environmental stewardship decisions before planting season begins," said Johanns. "The early release of these funds will give producers time to develop effective conservation plans and help them to improve their land."

The funds' early release ensures farmers and ranchers in the nation's 50 states, Puerto Rico and the Pacific Basin have more time to make sound decisions regarding their conservation practices. States will receive their allocations much earlier than in the past. Fiscal year 2006 allocations include nearly $1.3 billion in technical assistance and about $1.4 billion in financial assistance for NRCS voluntary conservation programs and other activities. A total of more than $2.3 billion will be distributed to the 50 states, Puerto Rico and the Pacific Basin.

With financial and technical assistance from NRCS, farmers, ranchers and other landowners will continue to address resource concerns on agricultural working lands, promote environmental quality, address challenges in water quality and quantity, protect prime farmland and grazing lands and protect valuable wetlands ecosystems and wildlife habitat.

Hopefully you didn't forget... By Skip Schultz

No, I'm not talking about a gift for Aunt Selda and Uncle Toivo. Hopefully you didn't forget how our area stood up and fought hard to prevent the Wild and Scenic Rivers Legislation. Legislation that brought about more Federal regulations on YOUR public lands and waters. Legislation that tried to pit the Forest Products Industry, Off Road Motorsports, Hunters, and Fishermen against each other.

Some of you may recall how Y-101 Radio raised over $6000 to send people to Washington D.C. to fight to stop this 'land grab' by the Federal Government. All this took place in 1992. Over 10 years ago, and to me it seems like yesterday.

I'll never forget my many conversations with the late Rick Jameson of the Michigan United Conservation Clubs. Rick repeatedly told me that the Wild and Scenic Rivers Legislation was 'solely' to protect any utility from building a new dam on the Ontonagon River. Jameson tried to reassure me that the Wild and Scenic Rivers bill would not have ANY impact on the Forest Products Industry, or have any impact as to where I

Then I recall reading how groups such as the Sierra Club, Wilderness Society, and others are so well funded that the lawyers they have on the payroll actually seek out litigation...

JUST TO KEEP THEIR JOB!

can ride my ATV/Snowmobile on Public Land (ie, Ottawa National Forest). I told Rick then that this Federal Legislation will someday come back to hurt the people, the economy, AND the environment in the Western U-P.

Then I get this e-mail spelling out the lawsuit that the Northwoods Wilderness Recovery, Center for Biological Diversity and Superior Wilderness Action Network first filed in 2001 against the Hiawatha and Ottawa National Forests for not implementing management plans for 9 of the 11 Wild and Scenic Rivers under their jurisdiction.

Guess what this is all about? Timber harvesting and road construction in what these extremist organizations say is "the 'corridors' of the Wild and Scenic River legislation." Yep, just why I fought so hardy against the Wild and Rivers Legislation. Right in their latest petition for the lawsuit against the Ottawa, they maintain that the Ottawa National Forest plan for 'Multi-Use' does NOT meet the guidelines of the Wild and Scenic Rivers legislation.

Think for a second...the Ottawa National Forest should 'not' be a Multi-use Forest? Are they saying that we should not have any Timber Harvest in the areas that these groups feel is owned by THEM? Are they trying to tell me that we should not be able to have a snowmobile/ATV Trail in this 'special' area the Northwoods Wilderness Recovery group claims ownership off?

I recall talking to a friend with a Federal Agency as to how they are hit constantly with frivolous lawsuits. It is these lawsuits that make it difficult for them to be able to work with USER groups in establishing areas where they can ride. Then I recall reading how groups such as the Sierra Club, Wilderness Society, and others are so well funded that the lawyers they have on the payroll actually seek out litigation...JUST TO KEEP THEIR JOB!

This is sickening! Not until the Federal Courts simply stop accepting these lawsuits will this ever change. Now the 6th District Court is going to hear this case on the Wild and Scenic Rivers legislation. Hopefully this will not effect the release of the new 15 year Ottawa National Forest Plan...unless of course the plan sides with those that want to turn our PUBLIC Land into one great big piece of property that few can use and few will have access too.

This lawsuit makes me think as to how those that told me the Clinton-Gore Roadless legislation 'will have no effect on ones' right to ride an ATV/snowmobile.' Yea right...I remember those words being said with Wild and Scenic. 12 years later, look at what these ANTI-Access groups are saying now. History can teach us a lot...as long as WE DON'T FORGET!

Candy stores and capitols

By Julie Kay Smithson propertyrights@earthlink.net

Any kid turned loose in a candy store, unsupervised, is bound to get sick.

That's what has led to our country's current woes.

We trusted elected officials to go off to state capitols or Washington, D.C., and do what they promised.

Such kids trotting into the candy store are going to be tempted on all sides -- and few of them have the ability to resist.

We are, after all, talking about career politicians!

Now add to the equation all the denizens that, leechlike, attach themselves to both elected officials and taxpayer dollars, banking on the skeletons that most politicians have in their closets.

Mix for a term or two and out pops a lot of illegal, unneeded and useless "programs," "plans," etc.

How can everyone wonder how it happened?

No one should be trusted any more than a child in a candy store, to be in charge of mega-dollars of other people's money.

After awhile, the politicians and their appointees come down with a terminal case of "entitlement" -- that wraith that makes them think they are somehow "owed" all those illegally gotten gains.

Toughing It Out In the Copper Country

by Carole "CJ" Williams

With the coming of winter, Valerie Lantz looks out her window toward a vista of snow-covered fields now visited by wolves, coyotes, and at least one cougar cruising in search of a tasty meal; faithful Spirit alongside her so the arrogant sheriff's deputy doesn't take her protector for a ride in the paddy wagon should the pooch put paw on pavement and upset the eco-neighbors.

On October 25th, Valerie, who was found guilty in April on trumped up charges of allowing Spirit to be off-leash while tending to his canine farm duties along side his mistress, successfully completed her six-month probation period and managed, through creative financing, to fork over hundreds of dollars to the Houghton County Court even though she's destitute.

Within seven days of meeting that obligation, I received a call from Val who was hiding upstairs in her farmhouse, so scared she could hardly talk. A deputy's car had come onto her property through an electric gate and then on down the long drive to the second electric gate where he just sat in his car for quite some time. "Please stay on the phone with me until he goes away," she pleaded. Hang up? Heck, I wished I could have instantly crawled through the phone line.

Though she'd done nothing wrong, she refused to go out and confront him for fear another eco-neighbor complaint had been lodged. The next day she found a March tax sale notice stapled to a rotted post way out by her mailbox, blowing in the wind at least a month before tax sale notices are normally issued.

Vermont: The Minutemen are More Mainstream than you Think

A recent Post headline explained that "ON PATROL IN VT., MINUTEMEN ARE THE OUTSIDERS," while The Nation described a Minuteman rally as a "fringe political event." In short, the Minutemen are widely regarded both as outside agitators to the areas they patrol and as politically marginalized extremists.

But most of the Herndon Minutemen I met live just minutes away from the 7-11 they watch, next door or down the street from the day-laborers who cluster opposite them across Alabama Drive. And, while their actions are obnoxious, their concerns, far from being fringe, echo decidedly mainstream anxieties about cultural questions raised by uncontrolled illegal immigration. A recent Rasmussen Reports poll found that a full 54 percent of Americans actually have a "favorable impression" of the Minutemen, while only 22 percent have an "unfavorable" view. For liberals to dismiss the Minutemen as a tiny minority of racist throwbacks, loathed by the communities in which they operate, isn't just inaccurate. It's also naïve—and politically dangerous

No doubt the eco-powers that be are salivating like the wolves, as they eye her spring fed eighty-acres that sit atop rich native copper amid all that coveted bio-reserve land owned or controlled by environmentalists just west of Calumet's Natural Heritage Park. She's fought the eco-neighbors for over a decade and a half, yet refuses to turn tail and run, which most of us would have done long ago. The tax sale matter is another story in itself, one that's not quite ready to be told yet.

Since "The Victimization of Valerie Lantz" hit the world wide web on News With Views several months ago, the lady farmer has been touched by the kindness of many people throughout America, offering comforting words and more to help renew her faith in mankind and bolster the teachings of the bible, which she studies with a church group each week.

One young man, a Virginia soldier serving in Iraq e-mailed me immediately and asked for Val's address. His letter, filled with Christian words of hope, brought her to tears as she read it to me. Since returning home a couple weeks ago, he's called her twice and a rifle for varmit control will soon be on its way.

Well-known writer, Devy Kidd, also sent a message, more colorful and irate in tone, and also asked for an address so she could send words of hope to Val. Quince Eddens in Pennsylvania, a talented violin craftsman and Patriot, also messaged with an offer of a politically placed job for Valerie, should she decide to pull up roots and beat a hasty retreat to his friend's campaign office in Texas. He also sent her a wonderful letter of encouragement and still messages me from time to time to ask how she's doing.

Many others also wrote for Val's address, but perhaps the most important message of all came from a lady by the name of Jeannie Soderman, an international and national reporter who's ready to pursue Val's case legally, provided one of her well placed friends can find an attorney to step to the plate. Jeannie, who is married to a PI and lives in South America for part of the year, has already taken on the sheriff's office re the squad car in Val's yard and was put on hold for 15 minutes, likely because the man was scrambling for answers to some very pointed questions asked after she told him many messages about Copper Country environmentalists were crossing her desk. She's also contacted the county comptroller re the mess the county has made of Val's property tax bill. Jeannie, a reformed environmentalist, is involved with Freedom 21 Radio in Santa Cruz and intends to have Valerie as a radio program guest sometime in the not too distant future. She and her hubby are planning a trip to the Copper Country to meet the lady farmer in February.

I take Val a care package of food from time to time and gave her an electric chain saw I thought I might use for wood sculpture someday, but which was put to better use by Val to "make wood" for warmth this winter. No visit is complete, however, without a rawhide bone for Spirit, whom I swear smiles at me when we play fetch.

When sending out Christmas cards this year, please consider sending one to Val. How nice it would be for her to receive a card to let her know that Yoopers and people in nearby states give a damn, just as people in PA, VA, CA and other far-away states do. Just a simple "thinking of you" means a lot when you're all alone at Christmas. Her address is: Valerie Lantz, Blue Mountain Manor Livestock, 55265 N. Cloverland Rd., Calumet, 49913. ~CJ

Washington, DC: Recovery Act a try for a better solution

Earlier this autumn, the House of Representatives passed common-sense legislation to reform the Endangered Species Act with approval of The Threatened and Endangered Species Recovery Act of 2005 (H.R. 3824). This well-balanced measure is designed to strengthen the original Endangered Species Act by providing greater incentives for landowners to help enhance, restore and safeguard habitat.

In the ensuing weeks since the House action, much misinformation has been generated in the press, including castigation of Congresswoman Mary Bono, who not only voted for the measure, but took the time to explain her vote to valley residents through a column ("Recovery Act offers viable alternative to Endangered Species bill," Oct. 30). It is time for the facts to be presented so that everyone can better understand why change is needed.

California: American Indians Seek Protection for Sacred Sites

Ever since snowmaking on the San Francisco Peaks was first proposed nearly five years ago, the opposition from Native Americans has been very loud and very clear. "The mountains are sacred mountains to us, have been for centuries," explained Caleb Johnson, who was vice-chairman of the Hopis when he spoke out against the snowmaking plan. "The Hopi people believe that the kachinas (ancestral spirits) live on the mountains, which make it a holy place, a sacred place." He told government officials considering the plan that for his people, the San Francisco Peaks were like a sanctuary of a church, adding, "you would not want to desecrate such a place."

6,000 students in Palm Beach County getting new nasal spray vaccine By Marc Freeman , Education Writer - Posted November 29 2005

Lake Worth - To avoid nasty flu bugs this season, nearly 300 students at South Grade Elementary School on Monday tilted their heads back and took two quick sprays inside their nostrils.

In a change from traditional flu shots, four nurses gave doses of the nasal vaccine FluMist as part of a first-time program offered for free at about half of Palm Beach County elementary school campuses.

"It's a lot faster than giving injections," said nurse Julia Besecker, in between squirts from syringes. "Kids don't usually like needles."

County health and school officials expected about 6,000 students will receive the complimentary vaccinations from FluMist manufacturer MedImmune Inc. of Gaithersburg, Md. It's a lower response than desired, due to Hurricane Wilma disruptions and decisions by some principals not to participate in the voluntary effort, said Dr. Marsha Fishbane, county director of school health.

Still, there were enough vaccinations to give local emergency and health officials a unique chance to see how they could respond to a bioterrorism attack or pandemic disease in the general public, said Capt. Don DeLucia of Palm Beach County Fire-Rescue.

The county was hit with the nation's first anthrax attack in 2001, and now South Florida health officials are eying the bird flu in Asia and fearing an outbreak in these parts. In such a crisis, anti-flu drugs and vaccines must be administered rapidly in large numbers.

"This is a little test of how we can get things distributed from one end of the county to another," he said. Fire-Rescue crews delivered the vaccines - packed frozen in dry ice - from the Health Care District's pharmacy in West Palm Beach to all participating schools.

MedImmune, in its third year of producing FluMist, had offered the vaccines at no charge to all 100,000 students in kindergarten through fifth grade in the county. The company, as part of a public health initiative to showcase the vaccine, is running similar FluMist programs in school systems in Maryland, Pennsylvania and Tennessee. "School-age children are the infectors," MedImmune spokesperson Clarenca Stephen said. "There's an ultimate benefit for the overall community."

While public health officials in Broward County chose to focus on other programs, Palm Beach County jumped at the offer, Health Department spokesman Tim O'Connor said.

"The offer of FluMist was a good opportunity for us to vaccinate the elementary school population who are more likely to get the flu and pass it on to others than a healthy adult," he said.

Like shots, the nasal vaccines are designed to block three strains of flu identified by the World Health Organization. Dr. Tommy Schechtman, a pediatrician who practices in Boca Raton and Palm Beach Gardens, says FluMist has a better chance of blocking the flu than traditional shots because it's put right up the nose, where the flu enters the body.

"The chance of this converting to a real disease is infinitesimal," said Schechtman, who helped arranged the school program with county officials.

Possible side effects to FluMist are cold-like symptoms for a few days after the dose. Children under 9 who have never had any flu vaccine before must get a second dose of FluMist in January.

About 180 of Boca Raton Elementary School's 370 students received the vaccine last week, Principal Peter Slack said. He is hopeful there will be fewer empty desks than usual after the winter holidays.

South Grade Elementary, Principal Michael Riley says flu season hits at the worst time, as his A-rated campus is intensely preparing for the Florida Comprehensive Assessment Test. That's why he encouraged the free vaccinations.

Second-grader Marquel Reyes described the experience as "weird."

"It kind of scared me," said the 8-year-old from Lake Worth. "It was my first time."

Florida Working on Wildlands Project

The Florida Department of Environmental Protection continues to fulfill the state's Florida Forever project of preserving up to 80 percent of Florida's land for the Wildlands Project. The most recent acquisition was for a conservation easement on more than 800 acres in the Lake Wales Ridge area costing $1.2 million taxpayer dollars. The reason for conservation easements is they are cheaper for the state than outright acquisition. "What makes this so exciting," gushed Tricia Martin, Lake Wales program director for the Nature Conservancy, is that it "represents progress in our efforts to piece the natural areas back together again." She continued, "It's so important for us to try and connect these landscapes and try to manage these lands into the future." More than $755 million has been invested through the Florida Forever program to preserve about 500,000 acres near military bases and there are plans afoot to buy another 650,000 acres to preserve wildlife around military operations throughout Florida.

A Right To Property, With Permission From the State

The New Hampshire Supreme Court apparently agreed with the U. S. Supreme Court's Kelo decision when it ruled the City of Nashua is within its rights to use the state's eminent domain laws to take over the privately held Pennichuck water utility company. The trouble began after Pennichuck entered into an "Agreement and Plan of Merger" with Philadelphia Suburban Corporation (PSC) whereby Pennichuck was to become a direct and wholly owned subsidiary of PSC. Nashua city officials objected to the deal and consequently proceeded to adopt a resolution authorizing the City to acquire the plant and property of Pennichuck's water works system. The resolution was approved by the voters in January 2003 and the battle commenced, culminating in the Court's decision for the City. The Court agreed with the appeals court decision, which read in part: "all property is held subject to the sovereign's exercise of eminent domain." "Ultimately," stated the New Hampshire Union Leader, "there is one owner of all property in New Hampshire - the state." <http://www.libertymatters.org/>

Hantavirus, Ebola, SARS, Mad Cow and Avian (Chicken Flu)

HANTAVIRUS

Hantavirus Pulmonary Syndrome (HPS), a form of adult respiratory disease syndrome. HPS was first reported in the United States in the spring of 1993. As of November 2003, 353 cases had been reported in the U.S. Thirty eight percent of the people died as a result of the infection.

EBOLA

Ebola hemorrhagic fever (Ebola HF) is a severe, often-fatal disease in humans and nonhuman primates (monkeys, gorillas, and chimpanzees) that has appeared sporadically since its initial recognition in 1976.

The disease is caused by infection with Ebola virus, named after a river in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (formerly Zaire) in Africa, where it was first recognized. The virus is one of two members of a family of RNA viruses called the Filoviridae. There are four identified subtypes of Ebola virus. Three of the four have caused disease in humans: Ebola-Zaire, Ebola-Sudan, and Ebola-Ivory Coast. The fourth, Ebola-Reston, has caused disease in nonhuman primates, but not in humans.

SARS

Severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS) is a viral respiratory illness caused by a coronavirus, called SARS-associated coronavirus (SARS-CoV). SARS was first reported in Asia in February 2003. Over the next few months, the illness spread to more than two dozen countries in North America, South America, Europe, and Asia before the SARS global outbreak of 2003 was contained.

MAD COW

Strong evidence indicates that BSE has been transmitted to humans primarily in the United Kingdom, causing a variant form of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease (vCJD). In the United Kingdom, where over 1 million cattle may have been infected with BSE, a substantial species barrier appears to protect humans from widespread illness. As of June 2005, a total of 177 cases of vCJD had been reported worldwide; of these, 156 had occurred in the United Kingdom. The risk to human health from BSE in the United States is extremely low.

AVIAN—CHICKEN FLU

Avian influenza is an infection caused by avian (bird) influenza (flu) viruses. These influenza viruses occur naturally among birds. Wild birds worldwide carry the viruses in their intestines, but usually do not get sick from them. However, avian influenza is very contagious among birds and can make some domesticated birds, including chickens, ducks, and turkeys, very sick and kill them.

How are hemorrhagic fever viruses spread? Humans can be infected in several ways:

- Contact with urine, fecal matter, saliva or other body excretions from infected rodents.
- Contact with the bodies of dead infected animals.
- Being bitten by infected mosquitoes or ticks.
- Contact with animals that have been bitten by infected mosquitoes or ticks.
- Close contact with infected people or their body fluids. Ebola, Marburg, Lassa fever, New World hemorrhagic fever, and Crimean-Congo hemorrhagic fever viruses can be spread from person-to-person. People can also be infected by touching objects such as syringes and needles that have been contaminated with infected body fluids.

In theory, we should be dead. In reality, no matter what the liberals tell you, we are all going to die, eventually. Some sooner; some later and it doesn't matter if you breath pure oxygen and eat only vegetables or if you breath second-hand smoke and eat cheese burgers like there's no tomorrow, you are still going to die. Some will live long, mostly healthy lives. Others will die before they see the light of day by miscarriage, abortion or still birth. Some will die quickly, some will linger.

When we seriously consider all the various ways we may eventually succumb, why worry about it? In a grab-a-pill, don't want any pain or discomfort, or inconvenience, society, we are helping incubate deadly mutations. But, hey, that's something needed to provide the world with some form of population control.

But with all the various deadly diseases out there, why would the WHO be so concerned about the Avian Flu? Even the President has spoke on the issue and is providing funding for an antibiotic and immunization. Congress is on the road to protect the pharmaceutical companies from the wrath of poor medicines.

The reason why the WHO and the UN are so intent on broadcasting the potential lethality of the Avian Flu virus is to indoctrinate the masses and deter any sense of intentional population controls. When people are taught that millions will die, they will more readily accept the death of millions. While the WHO and UN smell like heroes for knowing so much and giving us warnings, vaccines, and treatment, they will be holding the reigns driving the death wagon.

Vigilance is required on behalf of the citizens of the earth. There is a relevance between the suggested pandemic, chemtrails, Project HARP, UN/WHO and anti-Christian movement.

Abortion Survivor Gives Talk at Ireland College After Speech Canceled

Galway, Ireland (LifeNews.com) - A woman who survived a failed abortion attempt gave an informal speech at NUI Galway after college officials canceled her official speech claiming pro-life organizers misled them. This is the second university to give a student pro-life group problems about Gianna Jessen's speech. Jessen was invited by Ultrasound, a college pro-life group, to tour six universities in Ireland to talk about how she survived a saline abortion 28 years ago. Previously, University College Dublin, a Catholic college, forced the students to cancel her speech there after they insisted the group obtain costly insurance that no local insurance company could provide. Now, NUI Galway officials, say Ultrasound misled them about the content of Jessen's speech. "The university was led to believe that the lecture was to be on cerebral palsy. However, as soon as publicity of the event appeared, it became apparent that the person who booked the venue had misrepresented the facts and the booking was canceled," the unnamed official told the Galway Advertiser newspaper. In fact, Jessen would talk about cerebral palsy in her speech because the young woman developed the condition as a result of the failed abortion. Jessen calls her handicap a "blessing" because she's thankful that she's still alive after a procedure intended to kill her.

The Wildlands Project Comes to Yooperland by C. J. Williams

It's been several years since I uncovered the Wildlands Project (TWP) and realized the threat it poses to our traditional way of life here in the Upper Peninsula. TWP is actually a group of fanatic eco-sociopaths hell-bent on restoring our country to pre-Columbus times, and by this is meant restoration of both public and private property, regardless of what we may want for ourselves. Their mission, which is rapidly coming to fruition, is to re-wild a minimum of no less than 50 percent of America and eventually relocate the "humanely" reduced human population to highly regulated and minuscule "human use" areas near Detroit.

Dave Foreman, a former environmental lobbyist, Sierra Club board member and New Mexico Chapter of the Nature Conservancy board member, co-founded the Wildlands Project after leaving Earth First! in 1989. Earth First!, which he also founded, has engaged in arson, violent assault, and vandalism of all kinds. In 2003, Foreman founded the Rewilding Institute to help carry out his vision for continent-wide landscape conservation.

Among his notorious quotes are these: "We must make this an insecure and inhospitable place for capitalists and their projects...We must reclaim the roads and plowed land, halt dam construction, tear down existing dams, free shackled rivers and return to wilderness tens of millions of acres of presently settled land. Phasing out the human race will solve every problem on earth, social and environmental." Hardly the sort of guy you'd want your daughter to bring home to meet the family, eh?

Like the multitudinous land trusts and conservancies helping government agencies to get their glommers on land and then dictating how it may be used, TWP is interconnected with other environmental groups through countless partnerships, many as a result of their collective allegiance to the UN's International Union for the Conservation of Nature. Quite often, TWP can't be specifically linked to various "restoration" projects because of its chameleon like qualities, but it is, never the less, exerting considerable weight and will on Mr. and Mrs. Joe Citizen and all their public school environmentally brain-washed children.

A Wildlands Project agenda exists for restoring the Great Lakes Basin through a bi-national program administered by organizations in the U. S. and Canada. And, while you won't find too much overt evidence of TWP at the local level here in the U. P., the Project has definitely assumed a guiding "umbrella" role, along with the Canadian Parks & Wilderness Society (CPAWS), to bring this program to fruition. Under this umbrella, cooperating regional-scale organizations, as well as government and tribal agencies, are busily carrying out the Wildlands Project's bioserve building and re-wilding in the UP and elsewhere throughout the multi-state Great Lakes Basin.

According to information posted online through the Great Lakes United organization, there are eight major "landscape conservation" initiatives being attended to in the Great Lakes area. These include the Algonquin to Adirondacks (ON, NY), Bog to Bog (ON), Carolinian Canada (ON), Adirondacks and Northern Appalachians Wildlands Project (ON, QC, NY, VT, NH, MN, NB, NS), Heart of the Continent (MB, ON, MI, MN, WI), Niagara Escarpment (ON), NOAH (the Niagara escarpment, Oak ridges moraine, and Algonquin to Adirondacks Heritage project), and The Land Between (ON).

An older map found on a CPAWS Website shows that all but a tiny fringe of the southern UP boundary is included in the Heart of the Continent. More research shows that, while the Heart of the Continent boundaries aren't firm, they cover at least 600,000 sq. kilometers, which converts to about 231,662 sq. miles of forest and waterways in eastern Manitoba, northwestern Ontario, northern Minnesota, northern Wisconsin, and Michigan. If you'll recall, bioserve boundaries are never stagnant, but always fester outward from the Biosphere core area through public acceptance of more and more stringent land use control, generally garnered by "re-educating" people to buy into the ecosystem management globaloney so they'll remove their human footprint without further ado.

The eco-whackos are also accounting for "global warming" and how it might affect wildlife migration corridors in the future, which means they're stretching their imagination in what volume of off-limits land and water routes might possibly be needed for critters to get from point A to point B, C, D, E, and F so they can eat, mate, and live the good life where Sheeple can no longer live.

Most landscape conservation initiatives are being carried out by networking environmental groups, land trusts, agencies, and individuals working at a scale of a few thousand to hundreds of thousands of square miles. All work simultaneously on both public and private land, attracting unsuspecting citizens into their web of deceit by promises of traditional land use forever. But, after they've sucked all the fight out of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Citizen a few years from now, they'll pull the strings tightly together to draw all private and public land and water resources into one humungous bioserve package, sans all but their "researchers", "trainers and trainees", and a few Native American guinea pigs who can perhaps show them how to make medicine from nature's pharmacy, as they freeze to death in the dark.

The Wildlanders are targeting focused land acquisitions, particularly along any waterfront, and they're getting a great deal of financial help through grants from government agencies, partnering eco-whacko groups, and philanthropic moneybag donors. They also get help from the likes of Congressman Stupak, who's committed himself to finding more funding for Canadian born Gov. Granholm's U. P. Big Deal, which is nothing more than a huge land grab scam by a bunch of eco-con artists.

The Wildlanders are expanding their core area buffer zones and wildlife travel corridor land acquisition program by promoting land in fee deals, conservation easements, purchase of development rights, or private acquisition by other means, like maybe driving lady farmers to bankruptcy and tax sales on the courthouse steps.

They encourage long-term funding through waterfowl stamp programs, tax check-offs, fees for access to public parks, refuges and other protected areas, hunting and fishing license fees, real estate transfer fees, user fees, and general appropriations. They also count on EPA, DEQ and our Natural Resources Trust Fund grants to keep their land control engine continuously well oiled.

The goal of the eco-whackos, as noted in their own publication, is to turn the Heart of the Continent, Yooperland included, into a wildlands reserve network through scientific research (no doubt eco-whacko in origin), and the "players", according to their publication source, are the Manitoba Chapter of CPAWS, the Superior Wilderness Action Network (SWAN), and others.

SWAN, founded in 1992, advocates for the protection and restoration of wild nature. They're active regionally and nationally in monitoring and appealing timber sales, educating, organizing activists, supporting legislation that protects natural resources, and campaigning for reform within the Forest Service and DNR. They're also very litigious, but then grants come easy, so what's a few dollars for attorneys when you want to shut down the forestry industry or close public land to ORVs?

SWAN's mission is ecosystem preservation and one of their goals is to build a biodiversity reserve system all across the Upper Great Lakes Bioregion based on the core-buffer-corridor balderdash. Hmmm...sort of sounds like the Wildlands Project's objectives, doesn't it?

What really galls this old gal is that if she can figure all this out, why can't our congressmen and local government officials, who are allowing this to take place in our communities, figure it out, too? Is silence the voice of their consent, are they all on the take, or are they just afraid to stand up to the "watermelon" people?

Hey Howard... Where's your plan? <http://www.gopusa.com/theloft>

Posted By Bobby Eberle On December 1, 2005 at 7:28 am

On Wednesday, President Bush outlined his plan for "Victory in Iraq." The plan highlights the reconstruction and developmental needs in Iraq along three "tracks": political, security, and economic. As was expected, the Democrats were quick to pounce, criticizing the president's address before the echo of the sound had even faded. However, their rhetoric lacks a critical element. For all their complaining, the Democrats have yet to offer any plan of their own.

In a recent e-mail from Democratic National Committee Chairman Howard Dean, titled "Shame on Them," Dean focuses first on Republican House member Jean Schmidt and her comments regarding Pennsylvania Democrat Rep. Jack Murtha. Murtha had made statements suggesting an immediate withdrawal of U.S. forces from Iraq. Dean notes of Schmidt's criticism that the DNC will now "put billboards up in the hometown of any Republican leader trying to distract from their failed leadership by attacking a veteran's service."

I'm sorry Dr. Dean, but give me a break! The Democrats have thrown verbal bombs for decades with impunity, and now a Republican finally talks tough and you can't handle it? It's time for a reality check here. When someone advocates a reckless policy such as immediate withdrawal from Iraq, it doesn't matter what the background of the speaker is. It's the words that matter, and in this case, those words not only deserved criticism, but also sent the wrong message to terrorists across the world.

The letter goes on to say that Republicans are using attack strategies to "distract people from the simple fact that they have lost credibility on national security and foreign policy." Excuse me, but even during the 2004 presidential campaign, when security issues were front and center, there was nothing presented by Democrat John Kerry to make him credible on either the security or the foreign policy issue. Then, as now, all the Democrats could do was criticize.

Dean goes on to write:

They abandoned the hunt for Osama bin Laden. They manipulated intelligence to sell the war in Iraq, and failed to plan adequately for the war before it started. They destroyed the moral authority America built up over five decades of Democratic and Republican presidents, and they alienated the universal support for our cause after September 11th.

Americans deserve to hear an exit strategy in Iraq and a plan to restore our moral leadership in the world. And questioning the patriotism of those who demand these things is absolutely out of bounds.

Democrats like Dean know nothing about delivering a positive message to the American people. In fact, they have no message whatsoever. They do a great job of telling Americans that Republicans are bad, but don't bother telling them why Democrats are good. The reason is simple: the Democrats have no constructive, positive plan for any issue facing America. Whether its Social Security, taxes, Iraq, or the War on Terror, the Democrats are a blank slate when it comes to solutions.

Republicans have a plan for addressing the major issues facing America. The tough battle for our side is not backing down from our message in the face of attacks by the Democrats. Over the past decade, America has said, "Republicans, we want you to lead." It's time for us to do so. And the time is now!
