Attention: Your Government Has Run Amuck!

How can we determine whether something is a good thing or not a good thing? The 1990s sold the farm to the UN and to the environmentalists. Agricultural rules limit a farmer's ability to use old and proven farming techniques and the UN wants irrigation water monitored. Water may be cleaner than it has been since the mid 1700s, yet additional controls are implemented, not to provide for cleaner water, but to provide for tighter restrictions and controls over water usage.

The Chicken Little eco-whacks are beside themselves in their claims that the polar ice caps are melting, yet there are no real distinguishable temperature variations between freezing and freezing. They had professed that we are in the midst of global warming caused by green house gases. But now, because there is a rather definite indication that winter is still winter, they are suggesting another ice age is rapidly descending on us, evidently directly linked to global warming.

Senator Kay Baily-Hutinson (R—Texas) has introduced a bill that would provide money to research weather modification. Anyone looking skyward for the last nine years have noticed there are "persistent contrails" (EPA defined) left by aircraft. The residual plumes magnify the sunlight while drying out the air, yet that isn't a weather modification experiment.

There have been 26 named tropical storms in the Atlantic so far during the 2005 hurricane season. Most weather patterns will send the plumes drifting eastward. There have been 15 named storms in the Eastern Pacific in 2005.

In many circles, these storms have been attributed to global warming while among others, these are no more than a cyclical pattern that will be with us for a period of 12—15 years. But then there are the critics, like us here at the Yooper Scooper, that see the transitional effects as corresponding to the "persistent contrails".

Since the odd contrails have become highly prevalent in the skies over America, there have been several inconsistent weather patterns. In 2003, an article reflected some of the anomalies, "The future of dry bean production in Mexico is in question. Inconsistent weather patterns and economic stress threaten to make it unprofitable in many states." The drought was also prevalent in the Midwest and the mountain regions. It was all more than just coincidental.

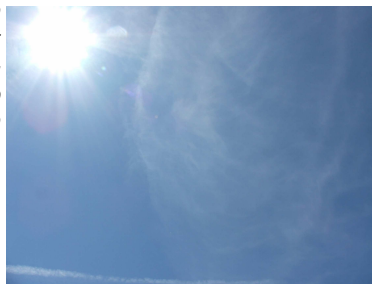

As a society, when we look closely at where we are in 2005 and where we should have been by now, we see an intentional delineation from many advances here in the United States and around the world. Most intriguing is our overwhelming ability to feed the world, yet we prevent it from happening.

We have been given warnings about the consistent use of antibiotics because mutations render them useless, yet we are in the midst of promoting a painless society when we're inundated by pharmaceutical commercials. They need go the way of tobacco ads.

So, where does that place government on many of these issues? Directly at the center and in full measure, completely responsible for both our failures and our intentionally limited successes. Only those with money and connections are elected and the rest are unaccountable.

Governor Granholm is now blaming the auto industries' economic woes on President Bush and demands better protection against those darn high quality, lower priced (despite high tariffs), far more reliable imports. As Americans, we never had a problem with union workers benefiting from union wages and safety measures, but it appears the bottom-line profit margins have ultimately dictated the U. S. auto manufactures demise. When a mediocre automobile costs Americans more than half of their annual income and an additional portion is also being paid out for insurance and maintenance, it really doesn't take an economic genius to figure out why sales have slowed.

The housing market in the United States is heading for an immeasurable decline in value. Most of the baby-boomers have built new homes and let their parents' old homes dwindle in value. Now that baby-boomers will be heading to their motor homes and condos on the ocean, the decline in the population due to abortion and birth control, means their homes will have only nominal value.

THEY HUNGER AND THEY THIRST BY JIM HAFEMAN

Father Alex K. Sample, a priest of the diocese, has been appointed by Pope Benedict XVI to succeed Bishop Garland as bishop. <http://www.upcatholic.org/>

Readers of the Yooper Scooper already know the staff, and even most of our readers, are dedicated to the principles of God, family, values, traditions and a country that has a very progressive prosperity built on the foundational blessing of morality.

As a Catholic, I pray for a long and graced retirement for Bishop Garland. I also thank him for his years of dedicated service to our Savior and His children.

Now is the time for transitional healing and a prayer that those who had left the fold find their way back to the Universal Church in the Marquette Diocese.

Several years ago I attended mass at St. George Parish in Bark River, home of my in-laws. A young and devout priest had taken the reigns during a very rough transition period in the area. A consolidation between the Bark River and Perronville parishes was underway and the very capable Father Sample was in charge. The new community church is now called St. Elizabeth Anne Seton Parish. The aging buildings determined which one would be best to invest in and a declining membership required a responsive joint venture.

The first time that I had seen Father Sample in Bark River, I was actually stunned and amazed at his aura of reverence and devotion. I even thought that he may one day be our Pope.

Father Sample was assigned to St. Christopher's in Marquette, so it was always a pleasure when our road led us to Marquette for mass. Our most recent mass at St. Christopher's was done without the benefit of a choir. Father Sample, who was blessed with a good singing voice, conducted a large portion of the mass acappella and led the congregation in song. That was the first mass in ages when we were treated to a respectful silence during communion and could spend that too infrequent time contemplating the Eucharist. Father Sample had recognized the devotion and commented about the treasure of our moments spent in contemplative silence.

Since 2000, the membership in the Diocese of Marquette had fallen 19%; just over 27,000 people attended mass during the last census. This is unacceptable, especially at this time when Pantheism and atheism is dominating the very young and very weak souls. A firm religious structure built on God's foundation is needed in our lives.

Father Sample will be accepting the leadership role at a time when we are in need of spiritual direction the most. The pews are nearly void of children and even young adults, the Blessed Sacraments have become more of a go-through-the-motions type of requirement and the Tabernacle is placed on the side or even out of view in many Catholic churches. Other trials that have befallen the Church is the liberalization of the Word of God through inclusive language and the sex scandals that had coincided with the liberalization. In my time, Bishop Noa would attend all the Confirmations throughout the Diocese; this was at a time when the roads were far more horrendous. There was no such thing as a straight line among road engineers.

Father Sample will have his work cut-out for him as our new Bishop. A student of Cannon Law, he will be an asset in the conversion of souls and will be beneficial to those who have left the Catholic Faith. We wait to fill the void of our hunger for Truth and to quench our thirst by the advocates of God's Word. We shall not fear the challenges of Satan's tyranny.

What is Pantheism? Pantheism holds that the cosmos, taken or conceived of as a whole, is synonymous with God. The Cosmos is divine, and the earth sacred. Pantheists do not propose belief in a deity; rather, they hold nature itself as a creative presence. Pantheism reconciles science and religion through ecology leading to strong environmental awareness. Pantheists believe in Divine Immanence. To the Pantheist, divinity does not transcend reality; it surrounds, and is within. All share divinity. This leads the pantheist to personal ethics of tolerance and understanding, sometimes.

Gallup: Poll Finds Americans' Belief in God Remains Strong By E&P Staff

NEW YORK A new Gallup survey released today finds that four decades after the "God Is Dead" controversy was first noted, Americans retain a strong belief in a higher power. Some 94% think God exists.

Only 5% feel God "does not exist" -- and even most of them "are not sure" of that. Exactly 1% are certain there is no God.

But how strongly do the believers believe? Nearly 8 in 10, in fact, say they are "convinced" God exists, although Gallup does not ask them why that is.

Conservatives are more likely to be convinced than liberals (87% vs. 61%), women a little more likely than men (82% vs. 73%), and residents of the South more than those in the East (88% vs. 70%).

Surprisingly, some 61% of those who seldom or never attend church are nevertheless convinced that God exists.

Editor's Note: If this poll is accurate, then why do nearly 50% of the voters who vote, vote for candidates who are against morality, freedom, life and issues requiring accountability and responsibility among those trusted to serve the people? Why do they vote for liars and perverts?

Eugenics; Accomplished through Abortion & Euthanasia

The theory of eugenics postulated a crisis of the gene pool leading to the deterioration of the human race. The best human beings were not breeding as rapidly as the inferior ones --- the foreigners, immigrants, Jews, degenerates, the unfit, and the "feeble minded." Francis Galton, a respected British scientist, first speculated about this area, but his ideas were taken far beyond anything he intended. They were adopted by science-minded Americans, as well as those who had no interest in science but who were worried about the immigration of inferior races early in the twentieth century --- "dangerous human pests" who represented "the rising tide of imbeciles" and who were polluting the best of the human race.—Michael Crichton

Through deliberate intent and design, the United States had gone through a transitional period that was more than just providing equal rights to women; those who organized them wanted far more than just a pile of burning bras.

Since January 22, 1973, over 48.25 million babies have been aborted. The Roe v. Wade decision had effectively launched the most racist agenda since the Holocaust. The primary targets of abortion are the degenerates, poor, inferior and minorities. In some cases, sterilization is the prescribed remedy.

The onset and popularity of euthanasia to eliminate those in our society who are elderly or unproductive citizens has caused a disturbing social insensitivity toward life.

While the peaceniks protest a war that has propelled an oppressed people into a new freedom-based society, they also keep a vigilance outside the walls of prisons where a guilty person is preparing to be executed. Yet they are the ones that make donations to abortion clinics and to groups pushing for legislative laws that provide for euthanasia.

The American schizophrenics exist beyond the common bonds that provides a camaraderie among those on the left who are no more than principled Communist and Nazi ideologues, it is also present among the apathetic in our society. Those who advocate the murder of the innocent are not contrarily opposed by the feeble minded moderates. They are two forces of our contention.

During these final days we will continue to only watch as all that is important to us falls at the hands of those who have godless, impoverished souls and who are Satan's advocate generals. Most of us don't want to be bothered with influencing decisions that we have entrusted to politicians to make for us; representatives are the ones elected to maintain a vigilance and to ensure our wellbeing. The truth is that we are obligated to participate in our system of government, maintain a vigilance that goes beyond the headlines in tonight's paper and be responsible for the lives we failed to save through our inactions. We are in effect equally as guilty and responsible for the deaths of the innocent through our inactions, as liberals are for their actions.

"The fact is that most fathers are not incestuous rapists. Likewise, most parents are not unhinged throwbacks who simply cannot handle juvenile pregnancies. Indeed, parents know a lot more about their children than do abortion advocates or judges. They have the history and connection with their kids to help them get through the trauma of such a pregnancy. Even in the most caring families, though, children often try to hide misconduct rather than face recrimination or embarrassment. The law should not reinforce those inclinations by allowing minors to bar parental knowledge or consent. What these groups fail to recognize is that the rights of speech, association and religion mean little if parents cannot teach and reinforce moral choices within their families. Family values and integrity are not the enemies of the right to privacy but the very things that privacy is meant to protect."—Jonathan Turley (Legal Scholar, George Washington University)

Internationalism; Expanding the Economic Gaps

Internationalism is knocking on our door and the increase in the gap between those who have and those who have not has widened at such a dramatic rate that the elitists were having a difficult time from keeping those who are known as unworthy from attaining substantial wealth.

At the conclusion of the Clinton Administration, computer stocks were building little self-sufficient empires in many homes across America that required a massive sell-off to bring the value of the stocks down.

Many of the former wealthy were put back in their place. But the stock market wasn't the only place that needed some fine tweaking; savings needed to be reduced and debt needed to be increased.

The costs for consumers on goods and services had to help destroy independence.

It began with the entertainment industry and ended, so far, with the oil industry. In between was the auto and insurance industry and high-cost housing with excessive 30 year debts in an intentionally rigged faltering economy.

The auto industry, with costs on products and service, in particular mandatory warranty service, picked away at the pay checks. The more recent scam is to allow for your trade at the going "auction" rate. This screws the buyer and significantly increases the profits of the dealership.

Auto insurance goes up with each purchase of a new or different vehicle, but as the value of the vehicle goes down, the rates do not. The personal age discounts appear after paying for insurance for thirty-plus years.

After these major costs to consumers, we then have the state and federal government picking away for their share. In Michigan you will pay a 6% sales tax on a vehicle. When it comes time to trade, you will pay 6% sales tax on the new vehicle with no credit for the value of your trade deducted from the total.

However, the best way to really throw the screws to the people least able to afford to live comfortably is to tax the few items that may provide them with pleasure, like a $2.00 per pack cigarette tax.

Governor Granholm Factoid: Michigan cigarette tax is $2.00 per pack. Add the cost of the product, the federal tax and State tax together and then Michigan throws a 6% sales tax on top of that; taxing the taxes.

2006 Election—Preparing to Make a Statement

The Canadians have finally become fed up with liberals and the heavy costs to the people that come with their self-promoting ideologies that have effectively established an extremely dependent class. In 2006, citizens of the United States have a dual conflict; liberals that destroyed our credibility, perseverance and independence and the loosely conservative politicians that have failed their constituents by promoting compromise. We need to replace as many of them as we can in 2006.

The point in time declared by Senator Tom Delay as being the time frame in which the GOP would launch their full power has come and gone. The boys and girls in DC have served no purpose for the past year and with many reelection bids on the table and with campaign initiations just around the corner, most of the bragging that will be done in an attempt to bring the constituents on board will be no more than a repeat of any previous election bid. We know they can't be trusted.

So we now accept the fact that most legislators should not be returned to office and many governors like Governor Granholm should not even qualify for re-nomination by their party. Contrarily, we realize that several states are home to the intellectually and politically challenged. The states of Massachusetts and New York for example will probably reelect their less than honorable senators. Our mission has to be to keep the incompetent senators from exerting any further influence.

Our secondary mission is to identify and seat competent people who are willing to not only campaign on moral and independence-building issues, but to stick by their principles once they earn the right to serve the people. Our constitutional futures are at stake. UN controls, property rights, taxation, education, outdoor recreation, Social Security viability and sustainability and other globalization and harmonization controls need to be prevented. And, we need the support of God Himself.

Should we hang a left, a right or go both ways? By J. Powers

Well, well, well. It appears as if Iran needs a spanking. A tanker full of forged ballots were confiscated as they came across the Iranian border into Iraq. Does this signal a want by Iran to be next in our political-cleansing initiative in the Middle East?

Attempting to influence an election by covering to the Democrat Party's strategy of stuffing forged ballots into the can may seem like the proper "Democratic" thing to do, but it is not an acceptable practice in a Republic.

The Axis of Evil states, which includes Iran, are in need of Republicization. At the end of the election cycle in Iraq, our troops will need to be Murthaized and sent to adjacent countries; why not Syria and Iran? We learned a lot in Iraq and those lessons could be implemented in Syria, which houses the Iraq's old WMDs and Iran, which has stated publicly they want to annihilate Israel. Iran is also engaged in a nuclear program for electricity.

Huh? Maybe the best thing we can do is to arm Lebanon, which was severely victimized by Syria, and let them invade Syria. We could provide some refueling sites just outside of Baghdad for the Israeli fighters and bombers so they can let Iran try and make good on their promise to annihilate them.

If Armageddon is on the doorstep, let's just get it over with already. We know the liberals are afraid to die because they don't believe in God.

But hey, their tainted souls really aren't any different than most peoples', but they would have a tough time explaining to God why they don't believe in Him. In fact, since Democrats don't think there is a god, other than tree spirits and themselves of course, they should not be concerned with that comedy-relief book referred to by Andy Rooney. Revelations is just one of its amusing chapters. Iran and Syria are imminent threats anyway and it doesn't matter if the tanker-load of ballots thing was just another New York Times fabrication. J. ## The Trouble With Forced Diversity by Fred Reed

Explain it to me, diversity. I don't get it. Everyone in the feddle gummint and all the news weasels and the academia nuts and assorted distasteful do-gooders with goiterous self-admiration are always honking and blowing about how we need diversity. Why? What is it good for?

I think we need homogeneity. Probably the greatest desire of humanity other than getting sex is avoiding diversity. Mostly, people can't stand each other. I respect their judgment.

Diversity causes nothing but trouble. Think about it. Do old people want to hang around young people? No. Do young people want to hang around old people? Generally they would rather take poison. Do liberals and conservatives want to get within rifle range of each other? No. Except conservatives, because they have rifles. Southerners and damyanks cordially detest each other, except after a few beers, when they stop being cordial. Urban folk and country folk loathe each other. Management and labor, Marine boneheads and army pukers, dogs and cats, on and on, don't nobody much like nobody.

So why do we spend so much sweat and money trying to force people to do what they don't want to do? It's all bass-ackwards. What if we tried...well...freedom? What if the gummint just left people the hell alone?

Naahhhh.

Especially nobody wants racial togetherness. Shoving races together just makes them mad at each other. If they had any desire to be together, you wouldn't have to shove them, would you?

In any city I've been in, blacks and whites work together because they have to by law, and then they go home and complain about each other. Blacks live in black neighborhoods because they want to, and whites do the same if allowed. As soon as black kids get to college, they want black dorms. The whites already have white dorms, and they think that's just fine. Night clubs in Washington aren't racially opposed to either race, but you find very few of one in the clubs of the other.

What happens when a gang of Chinese come to America? They go live in Chinatown because they want to be among their own. They don't hate everybody else and everybody else doesn't hate them. They just aren't comfortable mixing. The second generation moves out, but that's because they aren't really Chinese but Chinese-shaped Americans, eat Big Macs and listen to wretched music. By the third generation they'll be counting on their fingers like whites, maybe.

Fact is, men and women don't want to be together more than some. Men think that women are slightly nuts and they're certainly explosive and you always have to be careful not to set them off and they get ornery if you talk dirty around them, although they do it with each other. God knows what women think about men. Probably that we're crude and watch football and aren't in touch with our inner slug and don't care about feelings. It's all true.

When I was a kid in the South, at dinner parties everybody would eat together. Then the women went into the living room to talk, and the men stood in the kitchen and drank bourbon and told off-color jokes. It seemed to work. It was nice being around the women because they were more civilized than we were, or at least acted it. But there's such a thing as too much civilization.

Now, if you look around the world, nearly all the trouble we have is because of diversity getting stuck together with other kinds of diversity. It just isn't a good idea. In Gay Pair-Eee, (which in fact is probably less than half gay) the North Africans burn everything the French own. The French Canadians hate the rest of the country. The Huttsis and Tutus in Burundi or wherever butcher each other with abandon and machetes. Moslems and Hindus go at it in Kashmir. It isn't even a good idea to let Redskins fans and Cowboy fans get too close together if ethylated.

What do you think would happen in the United States if all the stuff 'em-together laws were dropped? I'll tell you. In about ten minutes the races would resegregate like whiskey and diesel oil. I'll bet offices and companies would get to be mostly women or mostly men before long because most of each flavor don't know how to get along with the other real well. It's more of an effort than with just one or the other.

In at least three ways, what diversity does besides irritate everybody is to Sovietize the country. One way is that the gummint has to make hundreds, nay thousands of stupid laws to intrude where it's got no business because if it doesn't, people will find a way not to mix. You got to watch them like a hawk. If you say they've got to hire twenty percent minorities, they'll hire the minorities best at whatever their business is. The others won't get hired. So the gummint has to make detailed laws and make everybody fill out brainless forms and be watched by bureaucrats, probably affirmative-action hires themselves, who bungle everything because that's what government does.

The second way compulsory mixing Russifies things is that it makes everybody worry about being informed on. Since different groups don't much like each other, at least lots of the time, the gummint, or management, has to make saying so a crime punishable by firing. Otherwise folks would get mad and say what they thought of each other. You'd have the equivalent of bar-room brawls every whichawhere. So people are very careful who they talk to at the water cooler. The OGPU is listening.

Finally, mandatory diversity gelds the press. When by law or policy a newspaper has to hire homosexuals, women, blacks, browns and what have you, it loses the ability to offend any of them. In effect this is censorship. It doesn't have to be imposed. Practically speaking, you can't point out very pointedly that eighty-five percent of some sordid behavior is committed by people like your boss. Or even the next reporter over. You have to live with them. So you write correct pabulum.

Sez me, we'd be better off if we had newspapers peopled exclusively by everything from loon comics singing the Internationale to bomb-everybody conservatives to race-based papers edited by Al Sharpton and David Duke. They could all fight with each other and keep each other straight. Fact is, with a diverse staff you don't get diverse published opinion. Homogeneous staffs would give you diverse newspapers. Then maybe readers wouldn't jump to the internet, the only diverse press we have.

There are major curiosities that abound this year: The anti-capitalist liberals are attempting to remove Christ from Christmas to increase its commercialized elements. The anti-death penalty liberals supported the murder of Terri Schindler-Schiavo. The anti-war liberals were quiet during our attacks on Kosovo, Somalia and Haiti, but now come out in droves against the Iraqi War when the U. ## Sheeple and the Consensual Conspiracy Syndrome By C. J. Williams

Before sitting down to thump away on the old keyboard and write what likely be my last article this year, I reflected on the many facts learned that strongly support the hornet's nest I uncovered two years ago. What I stumbled upon then was preposterous, too outrageous to be true, but the facts keep hitting me right between the eyes and the sad truth is that there really is a United Nations' Agenda 21, a nasty old plan for the 21st century that will remake us into cloned, mindless worker have-nots. There really is a Wildlands Project to turn our country into a nation of sniveling and beggarly, Mother Nature worshipping Sheeple, willing to bow to the dictates of elite Fascists running the New World Order funded by the World Bank.

As messages of concern and informational enlightenment come into my inbox daily from a multitude of watchdog researchers, property and constitutional rights groups, outdoor sports aficionados, and individuals who give a damn about our future, I'm continuously reminded that America, as we know it, will soon become a thing of the past. There's far too much documentation from too many sources for all of these people to be so wrong. It comes to me because I'm a writer, as well as one of the networking researchers who forward discovered information to people all over our country.

The sad part of all this is knowing that so few Americans realize how they're being victimized every day of what remains of their lives as freedom-treasuring citizens, and also that so many do realize the terrible truth, but have no desire to do anything about it other than whine in their whiskey at the local watering hole. The apathetic whiners can tell you all about what's wrong with our country and how to fix it, but they're the last ones to want to fix anything.

Way back in 1954, a Republican

Senator from Indiana, William Jenner, said, "Today the path to total dictatorship in the United States can be laid by strictly legal means, unseen and unheard by the Congress, the President, or the people...outwardly we have a Constitutional government. We have operating within our government and political system, another body representing another form of government, a bureaucratic elite, which believes our Constitution is outmoded and is sure that it is the winning side.... All the strange developments in the foreign policy agreements may be traced to this group who are going to make us over to suit their pleasure... This political action group has its own local political support organizations, its own pressure groups, its own vested interests, its foothold within our government, and its own propaganda apparatus."

The bureaucratic elite that Jenner spoke of was comprised of those people living in America as Americans, but whose "act local, think global" sympathy lay with an adherence to Marx, Lenin, and Stalin's goal of world conquest and the replacement of Christianity by communistic atheism.

Jenner wasn't alone in his abhorrence of these traitors, and one of several men who were also aware of this duplicity was John F. Kennedy, then a young Senator from Massachusetts who had already spent from 1947 to 1953 in the House of Representatives, and went on to serve our country in the Senate until he was elected as our 35th President in 1961, but then murdered by plotting madmen in 1963.

Though we've not seen it since, nor likely will ever see it again, Congressman John F. Kennedy, who usually backed bills sponsored by his party, also often showed his independence by casting his vote with the Republicans against measures sponsored by the Truman administration. He joined, too, with Republicans in criticizing that administration's failure to throw its support behind Chiang Kai-shek's National government, which lost the battle against Communist forces led by Mao Tse-tung, who then victoriously set up the People's Republic of China.

Kennedy also took no guff from the Soviet Union, but all that changed when Nixon came into office in '69 and made overtures to both Russia and China that caused our country to appear soft on Communism and dictatorships. Since Nixon's less than scrupulous reign, all but Reagan have crawled between the sheets with the U. N. and its commie/socialist/fascist comrades. And that, my friends, has given the green light to those fascist infiltrators who are still immersed in our nation's political arena and bureaucratic agencies a full fifty-one years after Jenner spoke out. Perhaps Senator Joe McCarthy, whom both Jenner and Kennedy supported, wasn't entirely wrong in the '50s, and, in hindsight, we might have been better off now had he refined his tactics to more effectively rid our government and its bureaucracies of commie sympathizers then America's form of government is a Republic, not a Democracy. In a Republic, government officials derive their power from the people through an election process by the people. Those elected must protect the rights of the people and collectively, as a government, conduct their business according to law. In a Republic, the People are the Masters, and government is subordinate. Our Republic was formed on the basis of Christianity to withstand the winds of time, not Pantheism, which is founded in the worship of nature. Our rights are bound between the pages of the Constitution of the United States of America, which is the Law of the People and enables us to control our government. Without it, we are naked and vulnerable.

All who are elected to serve us recite an oath of office, which commits them to swearing an allegiance to the Constitution, as is proven in this oath to be sworn by members of the legislative branch of Congress: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter: So help me God."

A Democracy is a government of the masses where authority is derived through a mass meeting or "direct" expression process. It results in "mob" rule and a communistic negation of property rights. In a Democracy, people are ruled by laws derived of passion, prejudice, and impulse without restraint or regard to consequences.

Under Socialism and Communism, there is severe, but not absolute interference in economics. Government, under the One Party rule, engages in centralized planning and all people are relegated to one class governed by those in power. Examples include the former Soviet Union and it's now thought that China, mired in a Marxist/Dictatorship, is heading in this direction at a snail's pace as a "developing" nation.

Under Fascism, a specific segment of the populace is separated and denied equality based on superficial qualities or belief systems. It's a two-class system: the elitists separated from all others who don't meet the superb quality criteria. Fascism promotes legal segregation in housing, national resource allocation, and employment. It's a system where the most desired humans who earn favors by kissing fascist keisters are finely rewarded, while the dregs of society make do with crumbs. It's entirely possible for a nation to be both a Republic and a fascist state simultaneously.

In the 20th Century, many Fascist countries started out as Republics, but through the use of fear, societies gave up their rights under the guise of security even though they knew this was wrong. As a result, the Republics morphed into Fascists states because people were loath to do anything about the wrongness, making them part of a consensual conspiracy that can best be summed up in the words of my former Latin teacher, "Silence is the voice of consent!" ~CJ

Jane Fonda: U.S. Troops Are 'Killing Machines'

NewsMax.com Tuesday,
Dec. 13, 2005 11:45 p.m. EST

"Hanoi Jane" Fonda is claiming that ever since Vietnam, U.S. troops have been trained to commit atrocities against innocent civilians as a matter of military policy.

"Starting with the Vietnam War we began training soldiers differently," the anti-American actress says in an email to the Washington Post.

Fonda claims she learned of the policy switch in "secret meetings" she had with military psychologists "who were really worried about what was happening to our combat personnel."

One doctor, she insists, told her U.S. troops had been deliberately trained to be "killing machines."

"This began," Fonda maintained, "because the military discovered that in World War II and Korea, [U.S.] soldiers weren't killing enough."

"So they changed training procedures" to teach troops how to commit atrocities.

Still, the anti-war gadfly cautions, it's important not to blame the soldiers themselves for carrying out war crimes.

Recalling the "Winter Soldier" hearings that she and John Kerry staged in 1971, Fonda lamented: "When you put young people into an atrocity-producing situation where enemy and civilian are commingled, where the 'other side' is dehumanized, we cannot be surprised."

Anti-war vets now returning from Iraq, Fonda cautioned, should be listened to instead of being dismissed as "unpatriotic."

"We have not learned the lessons of Vietnam," she declared.

Editor's note: It's evident that Jane Fonda is desperate to be recognized as a formidable anti-war advocate. The unfortunate love-fest by the media of the dumb-one.

That had to drive Fonda up the wall. It may not have been what the Democrats would consider a successful anti-war campaign since there are no reports of protestors spitting on our troops. Maybe that will all change once Jane Fonda joins forces with John Kerry and Ted Kennedy. The anti-war groups need a leader willing to battle.
